PRIVATE EQUITY STRATEGY – HIGHLIGHTING PLASMA

SAIVIAKA

Stablecoin Infrastructure for a New Global Financial System

PLASMA

REDEFINING HOW MONEY MOVES

Stablecoins have become one of crypto's dominant use cases, with over $250 billion in supply and trillions in monthly volume. Plasma is purpose-built to meet their demands with zero-fee USD₹ transfers, custom gas tokens, support for confidential payments, and the throughput to scale globally.

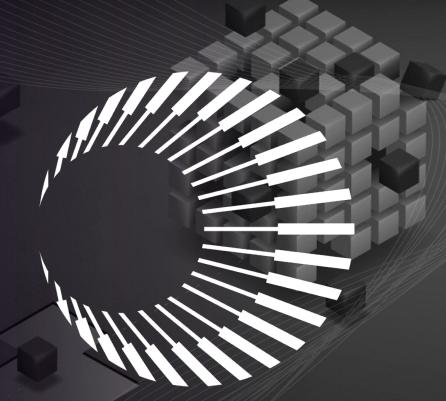

Plasma closed a financing round for the company, as well as $50 million ICO for its native XPL token, at a valuation of $500 million each in May and July 2025, respectively. Only the equity valuation is captured in the June 30, 2025 Samara figures.

Plasma has secured partnerships with crypto institutions such as Tether, Binance, Aave, Maple Finance, and more, with many more expected to close after launch.

Plasma raised $2 billion in stablecoins in TVL before launch, which made it the world's largest TVL launch when it issued its Mainnet BETA on Sept. 25, the same date the XPL token began trading.

The XPL token went live trading on Sept. 25, 2025. In the days following its launch, XPL has experienced significant price volatility, ranging from $0.70 up to nearly $1.70 on various exchanges with billions of daily trading volume.

Samara is a holder of Plasma's XPL token, however, its tokens are locked and subject to a vesting schedule, similar to other investors in Plasma. Given that the tokens are locked and experiencing price volatility while XPL is in "price discovery" mode, Samara management is discounting the XPL token's fair value by 50%. As such, management's estimated Sept. 29, 2025 NAV, assuming end-of-day pricing of all liquid assets on the Samara balance sheet, including the discounted XPL tokens, is £4.01 per share.
