

Statement regarding class action lawsuit in the US

Dometic has today through media received information about a class action lawsuit against its American subsidiary Dometic Corporation regarding alleged safety defects in gas driven absorption refrigerators.

The company takes this accusation seriously but vehemently denies that the company would consciously have refrained from eliminating defects in the said product.

Dometic conducts its operations in strongly regulated environment and it is a vital requirement that all products comply with applicable laws and regulations regarding safety. Dometic works proactively with product safety in an open and close cooperation with governmental authorities and strictly follows the applicable legislation and recommendations.

Dometic will come back with more detailed information on this matter.
