Data sets the mark for GSK Consumer

How the multinational company uses data analytics to sharply target its consumer health care products

"On television or any mass media, there is significant amount of spillage. Using analytics, we can 'sharp-shoot' our communication to the audience that is most relevant to picking up our brand message"

NAVEED AHMAD
Area marketing lead- Indian subcontinent, Pain and Respiratory, GSK Consumer

SOHINI DAS
Mumbai, 9 May

In the year since the British multinational Glaxo Smithkline (GSK) acquired Otrivin, the nasal spray brand, in a complex global deal with Novartis, its research team has been running the India numbers threadbare. Otrivin has been a bestseller brand for most of the 30-plus years that it has spent in the country, but the GSK team was reading a bunch of missed opportunities in the data. For one, even though one in three people suffer from a clogged nose in the country, only one in ten actually treat it, its research revealed.

To nudge what it saw as latent demand, into an active purchase, GSK Consumer Healthcare India (GSKCH) partnered with Google Analytics for a data-led solution. And the company believes, the use of analytics is helping design their communication better and driving efficiencies in cost and supply chain management. Otrivin's is not the only brand narrative being crafted thus, Google Analytics influences the planning for Sensodyne, ENO, Crocin and other brands. Hindustan Unilever's board approved a merger with GSKCH last year and will eventually hold marketing rights over these brands.

Naveed Ahmad, area marketing lead, Indian subcontinent, pain and respiratory, GSK Consumer, says analytics helps 'sharp-shoot' a consumer. "On television or any mass media, there is significant amount of spillage. Using analytics, we can 'sharp-shoot' our communication to the audience that is most relevant to picking up our brand message," he adds.

For Otrivin, GSK used an analytics tool called 'Ruled by the weather' that helps brands serve up relevant ads based on real-time weather data. As Ahmad explains, nasal congestions happen throughout the year, but has peaks and troughs linked to the cold and flu season. The tool helps predict a potential outbreak. "As Brand Otrivin, we wanted to be there when a consumer is genuinely in need of the product."

Google has an alliance with the Indian weather department which gives it access to variables such as wind direction, forces and such. The analytics tool has been created to capture the data and send out alerts to partner brands about an impending weather episode, say for instance 'a cold and flu' season for GSK. Ahmad said that having prior information (three weeks in advance) lets GSK do two things. First, reach out to the consumer with a contextual message and second, tweak its supply chain to be available at the right place at the right time.

"Let's say Mumbai is expected to develop a cold and flu outbreak. We developed a creative customised to consumers living in Mumbai (like building parallels with the traffic jam, or city landmarks). It was a contextual campaign linking back to a blocked nose and hence Otrivin," Ahmad says.

For Sensodyne, GSK tied up with Google Assistant for World Oral Health Day (March 2019) for a campaign called 'Hello Sensodyne'. The app urged users to seek more information about tooth sensitivity and then pitched the relevance of using Sensodyne.

The digital medium is dynamic, flexible and, its impact is measurable. Ahmad points out, "Progress of our campaigns can be tracked transparently and at very short intervals. We can even customise or tweak our communication to deliver on the basis of consumer feedback."

For Otrivin Ahmad says, "We worked with our digital team to target the audience (let's say a male, 35-45 years of age, working in air-conditioned offices). We followed it up with a call to action. If people were interested, they clicked on the banner which took them to an online pharmacy where they could buy the product." The entire path to purchase was tracked and carefully mapped.

Ambi Parameswaran, brand strategist and founder of Brand-Building.com is sceptical about the efficacy of weather-based analytics tools. "I would like to know more about data, algorithms and models that Google uses to predict cold and flu outbreaks. In the West, this model (based primarily on keyword searches related to flu) has been disproven," he says.

However for GSK and lmg, the online pharmacy partner, the tool has paid off. "In terms of engagement, (click-through rates), these targeted creatives got us three times more clicks. We saw sales grow by almost four-times on lmg (albeit on a very low base)," Ahmad says. The company did not share sales numbers, however. Additionally, the Otrivin Cold and Flu Predictor campaign won the silver in 'Innovative use of data and analytics' category for Mindshare at this year's Goafest.

Slowing equity...

In the case of debt schemes, credit risk funds continue to see redemption pressure due to the fears of downgrades and credit events. In April, these funds saw ₹2,248 crore redemptions while fresh flows only stood at ₹994 crore. On a net basis, the outflows for the category were around ₹1,200 crore. "What we are seeing is a knee-jerk reaction from investors in this category. Since the Infrastructure Leasing & Financial Services (IL&FS) crisis, there have been instances of downgrades and defaults in some cases. These have led to risk aversion among investors," said NS Venkatesh, chief executive of the Association of Mutual Funds in India.

Overall, the debt-oriented schemes garnered ₹1.2 trillion of net inflows in April, with liquid schemes getting the bulk of these inflows. Liquid schemes — used by corporate and institutional investors to keep short-term money — got ₹89,778 crore of net inflows in April. Among close-ended schemes, fixed maturity plans saw over ₹17,000 crore of net outflows, largely due to maturing of schemes and investors deciding against re-investing in these schemes.

Besides election-related volatility, the MF industry has had to grapple with regulatory changes, with the Securities and Exchange Board of India scrapping the upfront commission and reducing the fees charged by the industry to investors. However, industry players say things seem to have stabilised. "The SIP numbers indicate that the uncertainty around expenses and commissions is out of the system. In February and March, the SIP numbers showed weakness, but the April numbers indicate that people are getting back to business and things are back to normal," said Swarup Mohanty, CEO of Mirae Asset Management Company. The industry's assets under management at the end of April stood at ₹24.78 trillion, which was 4 per cent higher than the previous month. Of this, the equity schemes accounted for ₹7 trillion of assets, 16 per cent lower than the previous month.

SC asks govt ...

On January 23, the apex court had refused to grant bail to the promoters as they had not complied with its October 30, 2017 order directing them to deposit ₹750 crore. Earlier, in December, it had ordered a forensic audit of the company's books and assets. Accounting firm Grant Thornton had been asked to carry out the audit of the company and all its subsidiaries beginning January 2006.

Later, during a hearing in February, the court had expressed its displeasure after Grant Thornton said that it had received only about 45 per cent data from the company's officials. The court had then warned the company of initiating contempt proceedings for obstructing judicial work, and said all data including those of ex-employees must be handed over to the forensic auditors. On Thursday, following a request by the auditors, the court asked the banks to provide bank statements of the promoters as well as the company in two weeks. The court also warned that if there was any further delay, it would ask the CBI to take the data from them and hand it over to the auditors. Of the 16,000 homebuyers affected by Unitech's pending projects, nearly 4,700 buyers want a complete refund, while the other 9,400-odd buyers want either refund or the flat.

In April 2017, Sanjay and Ajay Chandra were arrested by the Economic Offences Wing (EOW) of the Delhi Police. According to the sleuths of EOW, the Chandras were accused of duping buyers who had booked flats in their Greater Noida residential project to the tune of ₹35 crore.

IBM takes to AI...

IBM started using Watson last year in India in two of its key divisions, services and infrastructure, for the bulk of its 150,000 employees as part of its "predictive retention" programme. What started as a pilot project in these divisions was subsequently rolled out in all of IBM's India units.

"The pilot in India has worked out very well. Now we are scaling it up to multiple countries. We have gone live in North America and western Europe and by the end of May, the platform will go live in eastern Europe, West Asia, Africa and a few countries in the Asia Pacific and greater China group," Sreenivas said. While the company refused to divulge the numbers, sources said overall attrition in India had fallen 2-3 per cent after the use of AI-led solutions.

Industry experts said as competition for good talent intensified in India among IT services players in the wake of changing demands for new technology, IBM was better-placed to recruit and retain staffers with the use of AI-led solutions. "We have a robust hiring process and it has not slowed. However, hiring has shifted to new skills. In terms of the numbers, we are comparable (to other Indian firms)," said Sreenivas.

IBM is using Watson also to improve employee engagement, map their skillsets and learning abilities, and enable them to take reskilling decisions. Its AI-based cognitive learning platform YourLearning provides a personalised learning experience to each employee by mapping his or her profile, along with analytics such as their social media record.

"We are well ahead of the curve as far as our workforce reskilling is concerned," said the HR head of India & South Asia.

In its bid to increase the talent pool, the global IT firm is working with Industrial Training Centres, under which students are being taught in accordance with the new curriculum apart from getting internship facilities with the company.

HCL overtakes...

Similarly, HCL Technologies sees its margins to be in the range of 18.5-19.5 per cent.

"HCLT has delivered a truly blockbuster performance with double-digit constant currency revenue growth of 11.8 per cent, which outperformed the high end of our guidance. We once again, for the third time this year, set a new bookings' record," said C Vijayakumar, president and CEO at HCL Tech.

"We aspire to reach the $10 billion revenue milestone this fiscal year." Last year, HCL Tech announced that it would buy eight software products or IPs from IBM at $1.8 billion, making it the single-largest acquisition by any Indian IT firm.

"We have launched a new set of products which is our own IP, and this is going to strengthen our portfolio in terms of products and platforms," Vijayakumar said.

In the fourth quarter, the IT firm signed 17 new deals and added two more customers in the $100 million customer category.
