About Feyenoord Rotterdam

Feyenoord Rotterdam is one of the two biggest football clubs in the Netherlands, a football crazy country that has been producing top players and teams for a long time. The club was founded in 1908. In just over a hundred years the band of brothers transformed into an internationally known and respected institute, playing in one of the most authentic and loved stadiums of Europe.

In 1970 Feyenoord became the first Dutch to lift a major European trophy, when it conquered the European Cup (which is known as the Champions League nowadays). Feyenoord was also the first Dutch club to win the Intercontinental Cup (1970) as well as the UEFA Cup (1974, nowadays known as the Europa League). In the Netherlands Feyenoord was the first club to win a 'double': in 1965 the Rotterdam outfit conquered both the league and the Dutch FA Cup. In 2002 Feyenoord was the last Dutch club to win a European trophy, when it bagged its second UEFA Cup. Nationally, Feyenoord has amassed a total of 14 league titles as well as 11 FA Cups.

In the last decade or so the number of players produced by the Feyenoord Academy ready for first team football has significantly risen to the point where home grown players are now the foundation of not only the first team of Feyenoord but also of the Dutch national team. No less than nine players of the Dutch World Cup¹ squad in Brazil were raised at the Feyenoord Academy.

The secret of this success is the unique Feyenoord Academy vision, philosophy and methodology with its focus on individual development. Even with limited resources the Feyenoord Academy manages to bridge the gap between youth football and the highest level. The Royal Netherlands Football Association (KNVB) has awarded Feyenoord for having the best youth system in the Netherlands for an unprecedented five years in a row. Feyenoord has produced more players than any other club for the 2014 World Cup in Brazil.
