Dominic Stevens, ASX Managing Director and CEO, said: “ASX has delivered a resilient result overall in FY21, with operating revenue growing 1.4% to $951.5 million, up $13.1 million, following a very robust FY20. Strong listings and equity market activity, due in part to an ongoing surge in retail trading, were tempered by the effects of the RBA’s current policy settings on both short-end futures volumes and interest income. This led to a 3.6% fall in statutory profit to $480.9 million – down $17.7 million.

“ASX determined a final dividend of 111.2 cents per share, fully franked, in line with our policy to payout 90% of earnings. This brought total FY21 dividends to 223.6 cents per share – down 6.4%.

“There was healthy revenue growth in our Listings and Issuer Services business with 176 new listings in the period, the highest number since FY08, and almost 200 listings in total including backdoor listings. The total amount of capital raised also grew to $102.5 billion – up over 5%. Cash market trading revenue was down 5%, coming off the all-time record volumes seen during the initial stages of the COVID pandemic last year.

“The Derivatives and OTC Markets business continued to be impacted by current policy settings at the short-end of Australia’s interest rate curve. While overall futures volumes were down 15%, reflecting lower bank bill and 3-year bond futures volumes, there was strong growth in 10-year bond futures volumes – up 15% – and the new 5-year bond futures contract experienced encouraging volume in its first seven months of trading. Austraclear revenues rose, reflecting greater bond issuance and trading, and we continue to see strong growth in our electricity derivatives business.

“In our data business, demand for Information Services offerings remained strong. Likewise in our connectivity business, Technical Services, which saw a rise in the number of customer cabinets and connections.

“ASX’s expenses rose 8.4% due to additional costs to support licence to operate and growth initiatives, and due to variable costs associated with issuer activity. In FY22, we expect expense growth to moderate to between 5 and 7%. Capital expenditure was $109.8 million, reflecting the expanded CHES replacement project and ASX’s ongoing commitment to strengthen our foundations to build an exchange for the future.

“We continue to progress ASX’s once-in-a-generation technology transformation, which will help us make business easier for our customers and underpin ASX’s long-term sustainability. When CHES replacement goes live in April 2023, the average age of our equity technology will be at its lowest level for more than two decades. The work to modernise our technology stack has improved the performance of our infrastructure: since 2016, there has been an 87% drop in the number of customer-impacting incidents and flowing from that a significant reduction in outages.

“However, the regrettable equity market outage last November fell short of our own high standards and the expectations we want to meet. We will learn from this experience and have already taken steps to enhance our processes and practices, including with our technology provider Nasdaq. We will also incorporate insights from an independent expert we commissioned in consultation with our regulators to review the outage.”

Mr Stevens continued: “Having flexible and contemporary technology is already delivering benefits to customers through initiatives such as our corporate actions straight-through processing capability, improved Austraclear functionality, and an online data licensing portal, which builds direct connections to data customers that previously connected to ASX via a data vendor.

“ASX is putting sustainable foundations in place in other areas too. The current review of our operating model has already changed some teams and reporting structures. Now, 45% of my direct reports are women and we have a target of 45% female participation across our entire workforce by FY25. Also in FY25, we aim to have net zero carbon emissions from our operations. Before then, from FY23, we will use 100% renewable electricity. To help others on this journey, we aim to provide products and services that will support Australia transition to a climate-resilient economy.

“A proper review of FY21 must give credit to the effort and dedication of ASX’s people. I am enormously proud of and grateful for their achievements across the year. We are conscious of the extra pressures faced by all our staff at this current time. Their health and wellbeing is our top priority.

“FY22 has continued where FY21 left off. Equities trading remains robust given ongoing uncertainty generated by COVID and the listings pipeline looks healthy. While futures volumes remain linked to the RBA’s policy settings, market support for our suite of energy derivatives and for Austraclear activity looks positive.

“Overall, ASX enters FY22 with solid operational momentum and a reaffirmed commitment to deliver value to our stakeholders and put in place the financial services infrastructure of the future.”
