Dunlevy Project UpdateHighlights

- The province has refunded the full amount of the reclamation bond held as security for 2014's Dunlevy exploration program.
- Other than annual rent, there are no ongoing expenses associated with the project.

Jameson Resources ("Jameson", the "Company") is pleased to report that the Ministry of Energy and Mines has inspected reclamation performed at the Dunlevy project ("Dunlevy", the "Project") and accepted it without exception.

This action has resulted in a full refund of the reclamation bond, in the amount of $35,000, held as security by the province.

Dunlevy consists of 2,534 hectares of approved exploration licenses located in the Peace River coal field in northeast British Columbia. The Company conducted an exploration program at Dunlevy in 2014. There are no activities planned at Dunlevy until the current coal market recovery expands further. Jameson has directed its efforts in coal to the Crown Mountain coking coal project in southeast British Columbia.

Jameson has no material financial obligations on the Project outside of the annual exploration license renewal fee of $17,738.

On Behalf of the Board of Directors,

Art Palm
Chief Executive Officer
