MARKET COMMENTARY

Most stock markets around the world concluded the month in the red in April. This was most pronounced in the US, with the S&P 500, Nasdaq and Russell 2000 falling by -8.7%, -13.2% and -9.9% respectively. The Nikkei was down a more modest -3.5% whilst the Australian stock market relatively outperformed the aforementioned markets considerably yet again, with the ASX 200 and ASX Small Ords returning -0.9% and -1.5% respectively. The MSCI Europe index only fell by -0.5% despite the ongoing conflict in the region and its flow on impacts. Worries about a China slowdown off the back of further lockdowns, slowing economic growth globally and higher interest rates in key economies appeared to weigh on investor sentiment.

Towards the end of April, the Federal Reserve commented that economic activity had expanded at a moderate pace since mid-February. Consumer spending, specifically in retail and non-financial service firms, accelerated and whilst manufacturing activity was strong overall, ongoing issues such as supply chain backlogs, labour market tightness and elevated input costs continued to be an impediment. These factors are holding up inflation although there were some reports of early signs that the pace of wage growth had begun to slow. The Federal Reserve also mentioned that its outlook on future economic growth was uncertain due to rising cost prices and the ongoing conflict in Ukraine/Russia.

To combat these inflationary pressures, the Federal Reserve began its rate hiking cycle in March and consequently Value stocks outperformed Growth stocks yet again. The MSCI World Value Index returned -4.9% in April whilst the MSCI World Growth Index returned -11.9%, underperforming materially by 7%. Surprisingly, the Australian market bucked this trend with the MSCI Australia Value and MSCI Australia Growth indices returning -1.5% and +0.7% respectively.

The timing for rates lift off by the RBA is predicted by the market to have also been brought forward as inflation has been stronger than expected. Ultimately the RBA delivered with a relatively hawkish 0.25% rate increase in early May and the start of quantitative tightening.

Looking at the ASX Small Ords Index, the Energy (+9.1%), Consumer Staples (+7.5%) and Real Estate (+0.4%) sectors were the best performers while the Information Technology (-12.5%), Financials (-4.2%) and Industrials (-2.4%) sectors led the laggards.

PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

During April, the Ophir High Conviction Fund's investment portfolio returned -3.3% (net of fees) versus the index which returned -1.5%. Since its inception in August 2015, the Fund has returned +14.9% p.a. (net of fees) while the index has returned +11.5% p.a.

The Ophir High Conviction Fund's ASX listing provided a total return of -9.7% for the month.

In light of the recent short-term underperformance of the Fund, we'd like to reiterate that we are not changing our investment process in terms of how we pick stocks or the market segments we typically invest in. Our ratio of picking companies that are upgrading earnings versus companies that are downgrading their earnings remains strong and over the long term, we believe stock prices follow earnings growth.

All investment styles go through cycles and our style has faced strong headwinds in the current environment. Recently we have made some modest changes to positioning as forwarding-looking indicators of global growth suggest a slowing environment ahead. We have decreased our consumer discretionary exposure, increased our exposure to defensive growers at a reasonable price and have favoured companies further up the market cap spectrum. Although we continue to believe in the quality and leadership positions of the underlying businesses, we are conscious that the flow of funds away from these types of companies can persist for extended periods of time.

In terms of our portfolio positioning, cash levels increased during April and the number of holdings increased from 29 to 32 over the month. We remain underweight in interest rate sensitive and bond proxy sectors (Real Estate, Utilities, Infrastructure).

One of the largest contributors to performance for the month was Elders (ASX:ELD). ELD is a provider of livestock, real estate, and wool services to rural and regional customers in Australia. The agricultural business has continued benefiting from good growing conditions and from investors looking for exposure to counter cyclical businesses to the broader economy.

One of the largest detractors to performance was Life360 (ASX:360). 360 is a technology company in the business of tracking the mobility of family members. 360 delivered a strong update in Q1 but due to a misclassification of its cashflow and because it's considered a non-profitable tech company, the stock price underwent a material sell off despite it providing a solid operational update. We think the business has sufficient cash to breakeven on an EBITDA basis and will ultimately be profitable in the near term. Any perceived misses by the market however continue to be treated very harshly.

OUTLOOK

To echo the remarks by the Federal Reserve, the outlook on future economic growth is uncertain due to rising cost prices, recent lockdown in China and the ongoing conflict in Ukraine/Russia. We still expect the Federal Reserve to be aggressive with future interest rate hikes and we're closely watching how it manages inflation given it is arguably already behind in terms of normalizing monetary policy.

We continue not to pick the macro or time its impact on markets and are maintaining our focus on stocks whose operational performance continue to excel that are cheaper than ever. We have a high level of concentration in our highest conviction positions.

After a very severe correction in valuations for small cap growth orientated businesses, we believe the direction of valuations from here will be determined by economic growth and hence how current uncertainties are resolved. A slowing overall economic and corporate earnings environment suggests investors may ultimately get back to caring about company fundamentals more and finding growth given it will likely become scarcer. Our experience tells us that vicious sell offs create the best opportunities and ultimately leads to significant future returns, as long as you can handle the volatility and display patience.

INVESTMENT PROCESS

Ophir employs a fundamental, bottom-up research approach aimed at identifying businesses with the ability to meaningfully grow and compound earnings over time. In order to identify these opportunities, the Ophir investment team spend a considerable amount of time understanding the quality of the business and the environment in which it operates.
