Yojee Limited (Yojee or the Company) (ASX: YOJ) is a pioneering platform technology company delivering powerful logistics and supply-chain management capabilities via its Artificial Intelligence (Ai) software to South East Asia and Australia. The company today announced it is introducing Artificial Intelligence 'chat bot' agents to the platform to handle many of the sales, customer services and operations tasks historically done by humans (Video Link Below).

Managing Director Ed Clarke said. "We are already selling software to partners regionally and closing in on one hundred parcels delivered per day on the Yojee Singapore network in its first promoted month with a very small team. We're offering the industry market leading 'Uberfication' software on a monthly recurring fee which includes access to delivery revenue from a rapidly growing freight network, filling empty capacity and reducing labour costs. It's a pretty unique proposition that's difficult to compete with.

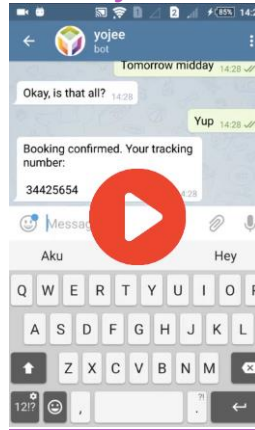

How YOJEE Software Can Be Used?

From a Pizza shop using the Yojee software to take orders and manage deliveries, to a nationwide logistics company employing staff in a big call center, these chat bots should remove millions of dollars of costs and create new efficiencies for Yojee partners over the coming years. Customers love it, too, as they can transact out of their favorite chat client like Facebook messenger or telegram without needing an additional app. It's a fast and seamless experience. We're talking about booking a parcel pick up in as little as 15 seconds once it gets to know you."

The Company will roll out the chat bot to help manage its rapidly growing Singapore freight and delivery business before implementing it into its Software as a Service white label platform.
